

FULL-DAY LEARNING FOR 4- AND 5-YEAR-OLDS: time to learn, grow and play

© Queen's Printer for Ontario, 2010

Starting in September 2010, the government will begin phasing in full-day learning for four- and five-year-olds. In the first year, nearly 600 schools will offer full-day learning for up to 35,000 students five days a week.

A complete list of the selected schools for 2010-11 is available at ontario.ca/earlylearning

Full-day learning will be expanded each year, and the goal is to have it available in every school by 2015-16.

Here's what you can expect.

Enriched learning during the school day

- Teachers and early childhood educators will work together in the classroom to help young students learn and grow. This team approach will bring out the best in your child through activities and play, guided by a new full-day learning program.

Before- and after-school programs

- During the school year, schools will offer an integrated before- and after-school program led by early childhood educators. The program will be optional and available for a reasonable fee. Subsidies will be available for some families, based on financial need.
- Where there is enough demand from parents and the board has the capacity, some school boards may extend these programs to other times of the year, including summertime and March break. They may also make them available to children from six to 12 years old.

Stronger start on learning

- Research shows that early learning has long-term benefits for your child's academic and social skills. A full day of learning early in life can help improve your child's reading, writing and math skills later on. It also makes the transition to Grade 1 easier – for you and your child.

How schools were selected for September 2010

- School boards worked with other local boards and municipalities to recommend schools that would be ready to offer full-day learning in September 2010. For example, the selected schools had to have space available already and consideration was given to what kind of child care programs best served the communities.

Good for kids, good for parents, good for Ontario

- Full-day learning across the province is an investment in our future. It's part of the government's plan to give our kids the tools they need to succeed and help us build a stronger Ontario.
